

Think Deep and Be Resilient

August 2017

Especially in a small nation like ours, the ability to remain future ready is ever so important. Students must be prepared for the next generation and remain resilient in changing times.

What is important is to ensure that we are constantly learning and our skills remain relevant in a competitive and unpredictable world. We need to keep abreast of new developments in order to stay ahead in the game.

We also cannot take our safety and security for granted and more importantly, we must form ties and collaborate with those around us. With the recent spate of cyber attacks, it is even more vital that we remain vigilant and alert, and hence, resilient.

Resilience is more than just being tough; it is about experiencing, feeling, failing, hurting and falling but overcoming all those and striving on. We believe that people who know more and delve deeper into issues are more equipped to deal with difficult situations. In order to ensure that our SACSS community remains versatile and informed, we have introduced morning reflections and current affairs sharing on top of our comprehensive values education curriculum. We hope that our students will develop into deep thinkers and understand the importance of remaining resilient, focused and calm in their life's journey.

“Resilience is not what happened to you. It’s how you react to, respond to, and recover from what happens to you.”
